Poetry for Christmas Gifts

"Nothing makes a finer gift to man, woman or child than a volume of good poetry. Today one is sure if he gives poetry to a friend there will not be anything particularly distasteful or obnoxious in the volume, for even though a poet may be frank and say a great deal, poetry always has a nobility that rises it far above the level of the finest prose. The poetical publications today are many and varied so that you may find something to suit nearly every type of reader."

Edna St. Vincent Millay's poems have been brought together in a book which contains those poems that are especially fine for children. The book is most beautifully illustrated and decorated so that on the whole it is acceptable to children.

Joseph Auslander's "The Winged Horse" and "The Winged Horse Anthology" are excellent books for the young. The first named is a splendid story of the history of poetry. The latter is an anthology of the best poetry up to contemporary times and includes pieces from the best of our present day poets.

One of the best presents that I think could be given or received would be a collection of the books of Robert Frost, though this is not always obtainable. "West Running Brook" will make a beautiful gift to those who like poetry of New England and to those who are fond of this poet.

"Our Singing Strength" by Alfred Kraynburg is the first complete outline of American poetry, 1620-1920. It is a very consummate work covering the whole of America. For a general book of American poetry it is the best. Another anthology that is foremost is "Twentieth Century Poetry" by John Drinkwater.

Henry Seidel Canby and William Rose-Beneft. This takes its place as the standard anthology of modern verse.

Many people had rather own single volumes of poems by a single poet, rather than have a book containing the poems of many authors. There are some notable contributions to poetry at this time.

Any of which are beautiful gifts. Among these are the following: "Selected Poems of Conrad Aiken" by Conrad Aiken, "The King with Three Faces" by Marjorie Allen Seifert, "Dark Summer" by Louise Bogan, "New Legends" by Harvey Allen, "Society Soul is a Circus" by Vachel Lindsay, "Manhattan Men" by Alfred Kraynburg, "The Heart's Journey" by Siegfried Sassoon, "A Cedar Box" by Robert Nathan, "Selected Poems" by Robert Frost. Larger volumes that are enjoyable for the lover of poetry are: "Collected Poems" by Vachel Lindsay, "Collected Poems" by Edwin Arlington Robinson, "Collected Poems" by John Massfield. Try poetry as a gift this Christmas.

On Shipping Apples

R. L. Cummings of West Paris Gives Story of Shipment Abroad

Who gets the money for the apples of Baldwin that were much better than the average lot. They sold in England for 17 shillings to 24 shillings and six pence. That means from $1.17 to $5.84 per barrel. That is in question sale on the dock, where unloaded from the ship. A few years ago those apples would have netted a little over $3.00 per barrel had on the trees when sold at their price. Today they net less than $1.00 per barrel on the tree. Who gets the money? It used to cost $12.75 to land them and the ship. The present rate is $5.41. It used to cost $26.64 to carry them across to England. Now it costs $14.85. This rate being an auction sale and often requiring but a very few minutes to sell a car load, they used to sell for two percent. There always was a group of more or less uncertain charges that were supposed to be legally covered up by the term "including disbursements," but just see how those charges have grown. They pay the charges that have been piled upon a lot of 72 barrels of apples aside from all freight charges amounts to $15.50. This is more than the man got that grew those 72 barrels of apples. I can almost hear some wise and wizen faced sucker advising me that "Times have changed and costs of doing business have increased." Very true my friend, but the cost of producing those apples has increased just as much.

Isn't it strange that all of these great interests between the producer and consumer have increased immensely, yet the profits while the fellows at each end of the deals, the producer and the consumer, pay for it? The producer gets less for his product and the consumer pays more for less goods.

The story began like this: It had been known for a long time that our public utilities (Railroads) had been running stock-jobbing and other forms of illegal profit. The Interstate Commerce Commission came into existence as a remedy. Politicians and financiers hounding it. Roosevelt put new life into it and created the Interstate Commerce Commission, who thoroughly investigated them and found that the power behind the scenes, the banker management led by J. P. Morgan & Co., had led them where. Many evils were corrected and the path to justice was clearly shown. The public fooled by the sinister alliance of crooked business and crooked politics fell asleep, and the enormous expense of rebuilding our transportation system was placed upon the public in the form of enormous rates for transportation of our goods. We have paid for them but have no title.

One sentence from the President's message just placed before Congress will show the present condition: As a whole the railroads never were in such a financial and financial condition. It is as true that they have been built again by high rates taken from the public, that would never have been needed but for the corrupt and illegal management of previous years. When the public resolves to do their own thinking and chooses men to serve the public at Washington and in August, our part of the world will be a much better place to live in for the people, and a much safer place for the man of wealth. Think it over. Maine has not been annexed to Mexico and we still have the right to choose our own representatives. Watch and see if our once grand old party state Mr. Vane from Pennsylvania, the man that took more than half a million dollars to elect to a ten thousand dollar office.

It used to be the grower. It is used to be the grower. The present rate is $3.54. It used to be $4.00 to carry them across to England. Now it costs $6.30. This sale was an auction sale and often requires a very few minutes to sell a car load of apples. They used to sell for two percent. There always was a group of more or less certain charges that were supposed to be covered up by the term "Incidental disbursements", but just see how the charges have grown. Today the charges that have been pinned onto this sale of apples amounts to $7.150. This is more than the man got that grew these barrels of apples. NORTH WATERFORD

Death of Charles Marston—Lithfield Family Moving to Auburn—Mrs. Lovejoy Returned from Portland.

On Tuesday of last week a great sorrow struck this little place when Charles A. Marston ended his life by shooting. He was at home in the middle of the forenoon and went to his sister-in-law's, Mrs. Hazelton's, and made a call, seeming almost the same spirit as usual. He then went into the shed without saying anything to her, which he went through for a short time, as he didn't return to the shed and stable, which he went to twice, before finding him. At last, he might have gone to the words of the stable by the way of a door.

He went to the stable, where he went to look for his horse. He called out to his horse and as no answer came, he went to the door and called his wife to go to the stable for Mr. Hazelton and came back not knowing the trouble. When Mr. Hazelton arrived at the scene, he saw his rifle on a wood pile where the man had used it and fallen dead. He called the medical examiner W. B. Ray, who was called, also Dr. R. E. Hubbard and he was pronounced suicide. As he had through an entry going to the door, Mr. Hazelton's rifle stood partly behind a door that he knew well about.

Mr. Marston was always an active and hard working man until five years ago last year he was taken very ill and not expected to ever rise from his bed. He has done a day's work since, although he got around and did chores at home and assisted his wife in many duties in the house as she is in poor health.

He was ever ready to help anyone as his health permitted, and greatly liked the man who knew him and over a kind and helpful neighbor. The funeral was held at his home, Thursday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Wentworth of Waterford officiated. There was an abundance of beautiful flowers that spoke of his high esteem. Besides his wife, he leaves one sister, two nieces and other relatives and hosts of friends. Burial at Bismectown cemetery. The deceased was 63 years of age.

A Simple Man

By Elva Dorr

The last conscious act of one of the greatest men in contemporary French history showed the simplicity that marked the career of Clemenceau. Just before his death, this man kissed the hands of his two faithful servants, Francois and Albert, in mute farewell.

The simple funeral services were as the great statesman ordered. The unstained, oak box, a ceremony of three minutes, with no Government official there at the grave, and only a small floral display. But Clemenceau left a command that the few dried flowers given him in 1917 by a friend—and carefully preserved—be laid on his casket.

Even the woods that Clemenceau loved so well as a boy were not to be "cleansed up" for the funeral. The last of the old "Tiger" issued orders. The briar wreath covering the paths, which led up to his windblown cliff, were to be left tangled. "The climb up the cliff is so rough that I want a few months before his passing. Part of man's destiny is to return to the earth. Let me become a part of Nature quickly."

The skeptic believed that dust thou art, to dust thou shalt return. But what of a soul like this man's? Perhaps he was not so sure of the progress of his soul as we are. His spirit will go marching on to conquer new worlds and to find out all wrongs. The old "Tiger" may have called himself a skeptic. It is not what we call ourselves. It is what we are. Clemenceau was always a skeptic in the truest sense of the word. He fought and won many a battle, and when some of his triumphs are forgotten, three will remain to ring down the ages.

First: At the time of the Great War, France was in a tragic condition. The United States had not entered and the French offensive had failed. The people did not know where to turn. Clemenceau was in desperate straits in high places were bitter against him because he had flayed them. At last the cry of the people arose for Clemenceau. He came. He relentlessly pursued, stimulated and organized France for victory.

Second: Then the old "Tiger" framed the Versailles treaty, which bears some evidence of his lack of faith in the future, but it was the charter of post-war Europe. This man was skeptical of everlasting peace. He lived long enough to see some of his skepticism refuted.

Third, and perhaps the greatest battle he won, was when he exposed corruption in high places, placed guilt where it belonged, and freed a man from a living death.

The whole world was shocked over the Dreyfus case. Captain Alfred Dreyfus, Jewish General Staff Officer, was falsely convicted of high treason—selling military secrets to Germany. He was exiled for life to Devil's Island, French Guiana (the most helllike place on the face of the globe. Read Richard Halliburton's article in the November number of the Ladies' Home Journal).

Clemenceau, Emile Zola, and one half of France, clamored for the revision of this terrible sentence pronounced upon a man whom they felt was innocent. Clemenceau first founded newspaper of his own, the better to fight for a man's liberty. Then the old "Tiger" relentlessly and unflinchingly set to work to attack the Government with bitter invectives and threats upon those who occupied the seats of the mighty. Clemenceau published Zola's famous letter, flaying the guilty one and demanding Dreyfus' release.

After five years of terrible bombarding in the old "Tiger's" newspaper, the guilty man, Esterhazy, confessed, and committed suicide. The Government released Captain Dreyfus and reinstated him. He fought in the War and is alive today. But no one has ever heard him mention those lost five years.

For these three triumphs, Clemenceau might well be called "The Father of Victory."

If this man is a skeptic then give us more of them. Because he refused extreme unction and the priest's blessing does not make him any less a man. He did his duty as he saw it and usually he was right. He attacked evil wherever he found it with all the vigor of his soul. When he once started on the scent he was worthy his name. The "Tiger" trucked his victim to his lair and there demanded justice done, or a confession of guilt.

An international figure has gone, but he still lives in the hearts of many people. Simply Clemenceau lived and simply he died. And this man kissed the hands of his two servants, Francois and Albert. They rendered him homage in death as in life—standing alone in the rain, with bare heads on a wind-swept cliff long after the funeral cortege has gone.

MISREPRESENTS TOTALS

The manager of the Savings Bank Association of Maine takes exception to the misleading statement sent out from Augusta by the Associated Press. It failed to tell it as it really exists. Mr. Nelson says:

The article states with some apparent satisfaction that there has been a decrease of nearly $1,000,000 assets and liabilities of the savings banks during the same period. They do mention that this may be accounted for in the fact that two savings banks "Ceased To Do Business Between September 1928 and November 1929." This is all too true, but they do not pick up the head threads and state that the total assets of the Boothbay Bank, something over $1,000,000, were taken over by the Augusta Trust Company nor do they advise their readers that by the change of charter of the Chairman National Bank of Portland to a state bank that also added well over $10,000,000 more to the Trust Company figures. This would seem to account for more than eleven of the boasted "thirteen million dollars gain by the trust company section."

Oh, Boys! The report was going all through the early hunting season that there were so tremendously plenty through this section, that in the green woods where Joseph Bosse has a crew cutting birch that during the night time they would eat up fully one-fourth of the birch tops from the day before's cutting. Now here is the situation as learned while talking with several of local hunters some of which traveled over thousands of acres of this rough hill country, all who say they can honestly report that the nearest they came to getting their deer that in a couple of instances they did actually see a deer though far in the distance.

Linn Farrar, well known as the authority behind the gun in this locality, and a man who makes hunting pay through the winter months that the law is off, is actually the only man from our locality whom we have heard that brought in a deer and Linn went far away to the Moosehead region. Yes, Linn landed his deer, although it was a very long haul. Donald Varney has taken the job to yard four hundred and fifty cords of pulp wood for the Fenley Bros., in the green woods lot, it being the work done last summer by the contractor, Joseph Bosse.

Lionel Bartlett still has out a short line of traps, Harlan Redding frequently calls upon Lionel, it being very seldom which upon these calls that he does not do business with this young trapper.

Omer Farrar has sold his Ford (or perhaps I should have said another Ford) this one to George Andrews. Omer says he has no time to ride as he is busy with the farm.

Fales are busy working in the woods on the lot where the Varneys are working in the valley section known as the Brown lot.

Floyd Varney has bought a yoke of steers from Frank Bragg of Hartford.

MAINE DAIRYING PROSPECTS

An Opportunity to Expand

Maine's farms are on the threshold of a new prosperity almost without limits if they begin at once to take advantage of their opportunities, according to Dr. Arthur W. Gilbert, Commissioner of Agriculture. He is one of the speakers at the Economic Conference recently in Lewiston. This opportunity is open to Maine dairymen, the Commissioner points out, due partly to the increasing demand for milk in New York and New England markets and a producer-distributor campaign which has already increased the sale of milk 15 per cent in the city markets.

"Maine needs more cows and better ones," says Dr. Gilbert. "Her milk-producing factories—her cows—are not running to capacity. Last week your state shipped into Boston 300,000 quarts of milk. This is but two-thirds enough to supply the city for one day. In other words, Maine is not able to supply the milk required to feed Boston and the city markets."

"If I am informed rightly, there are already too many small dairies in your state. Your farms are small and are producing more milk than the state can absorb. Your labor income will be proportionately increased. It is the money, however, because there are farmers coming, but oftentimes we find that the total gross business would not exceed $1,000 a year. How can anyone expect a net profit with a gross income of $1,000 a year? Expensive machinery, more milk from the farms of Maine and more milk from your industrial and agricultural interests will expand the demand for milk. The demand for milk is unlimited."

"At the present time there is a demand for milk in our city markets. New England is able to supply the city with short seasons. A year ago it was not possible to bring in several carloads of milk from outside points. Moreover, dairymen in our cities realize the necessity of paying a higher price for milk than they have been able to secure. It is possible during the winter months. Beginning today the price of milk in Boston will be advanced to 12 cents a quart which is the highest price for which milk has been sold since the peak of the war."

"Through concerted advertising by producers and dealers, an aggressive campaign has been set on foot to increase the sale of milk in New England. For years these markets have been supplied from Vermont. While Vermont formerly supplied a large amount of the milk in New England, it is now being supplied more and more from the New York territory. This is due to the fact that the New York Board of Health has issued an embargo against Vermont milk and cream."

"It is logical, then, that Maine should supply the additional needs of the New England Markets formerly supplied by Vermont. W. H. Brown of the new England Milk Producers Association says:

"Records show that the Maine dairy men can produce as good quality milk as any other dairymen in New England—if milk is delivered daily. The additional move therefore, is to get the Maine dairymen to qualify for the milk market and assure continued participation in the higher return for their milk. It is a daily delivery business, the making possible prompt shipments to the market. It is gratifying to learn that recently the Maine Central Railroad put on a Sunday milk train and that daily receipts of milk from Maine 20 per cent over a year ago."

"There is also an unlimited demand for Maine cream. Fully 50 per cent of the cream sold in our New England city markets must now come from considerable distances, principally the middle West. The freight rate from Minneapolis, Minn., to Boston, on cream is $2.21 per 4 quart can. The freight rate from Winthrop, Maine to Boston is $2.50 per 4 quart can—a difference in favor of Maine of $1.55 1-2. Translated into butterfat this means an advantage of $2.50 per pound or $12 per cent for milk. Compared with this, however, we find that the freight rate on milk from Minneapolis is $1.77 per can while it is only $1.45 from Winthrop, which gives a difference of $1.22 in favor of Maine, and when this is translated into butterfat, an advantage of $4.42 per pound or $15.50 per hundred weight of milk."

"Considering these differences in freight on cream and freight on milk it can be seen that it is more advantageous for the Maine dairymen to produce a product in the milk market. Competition consists of other New England dairymen who have the same conditions and costs approximately the same, than it is to come to a market in the mid-west dairymen has much lower feed costs."

"Nearness to markets, then, is a factor in favor of, is a tremendous asset to this industry of your State. The transportation facilities are good, the market, however, as your milk is in the hands of the dairymen who have the same conditions and costs approximately the same, than it is to come to a market in the mid-west dairymen has much lower feed costs."

"The program, then, as I see it, for the future growth of the dairy industry in Maine is:

1. Larger dairies—more milk.
2. Better machines—more efficient production.
3. Quicker deliveries—higher quality products.

"The dairy industry has a direct bearing upon Maine's tourist industry. The two are closely related. Your tourist has money enough to make the trip and enjoy the beauties of your State is very sensitive of the quality of milk which he receives. One of the first things he asks for is a place where he can purchase safe milk. This is particularly important because much of it is not pasteurized, because it is not bought usually near the large consuming centers where pasteurization plants are located. It is imperative, therefore, to sell high grade milk, particularly if it is raw, to such people. Your dairy industry must provide for a higher quality of milk in order to continue to attract your summer residents."

HAVE YOU TWO COMBS?

The room or bath equipped with but one comb may be guaranteed to produce more fits of temper than almost anything around the home. Junior takes the comb to work, while a naked dad stumps around shouting his disapproval. Mother drops the comb in the waste basket, where daughter fails to find it.

Have two combs in the bathroom and two in each room. The second one is a reserve comb which may be found when the first disappears. As these little necessities may be purchased for five and ten cents, there is no particular reason why any home should be combless even for the necessary five minutes it takes mother to answer the cry for help.
